Brexit Britain: Record numbers of families enjoy a holiday at home

Britain has experienced a summer tourism boom with hundreds of thousands more people choosing a 'staycation'.

Regional tourist boards are reporting significant increases in visitors with many hotels enjoying record numbers of bookings.

- 5 According to Visit England, about 5.1 million Britons organised a staycation over the August Bank Holiday weekend, up from 4.7 million last year [...].

Cornwall welcomed 3.7 million people during July and August, including 1.2 million staying for longer than a day. The visitor numbers, which included almost 84,000 tourists from abroad, are four per cent higher than last year, the Visit Cornwall agency estimated.

- 10 Mayor of St Ives, one of Cornwall's most popular holiday towns, Linda Taylor, said: 'Without a doubt it's busier this year. Whereas young families would have gone to Tunisia or Turkey, they want to just get in their car and travel safely to a destination.'

Holidaymakers spent a total of almost £503 million in the county over the six weeks to the end of August.

- 15 Tourist chiefs in areas including East Anglia and the Cotswolds also reported surging visitor numbers this summer.

Go Lakes, the tourist agency for the Lake District, revealed occupancy rates for hotels and guest houses in July beat a record level set last year. On the Yorkshire coast, Richard Frank, owner of The Crown Spa, Scarborough's only four-star hotel, said: 'We took over in 20 2000 and this has been our best year. We've had occupancy rates in August of 99 per cent. This has happened since the Brexit vote....]

English Heritage, which collated final summer holiday visitor numbers for its historic houses, castles and parkland, said it was on course for a record-breaking 1.9 million visitors in July and August.

- 25 As well as the boom in staycations, international tourists coming to the UK have caused a significant rise in spending of 7 per cent this summer, according to analysts Global Blue.

The largest nationality shopping tax-free was from China, accounting for almost 32 per cent of overseas spending, followed by the U.S.

- 30 Visit England director Patricia Yates said: 'It's great to see record numbers of Brits holidaying at home this year and with so much on offer, be it seaside, countryside or city breaks combined with our fabulous range of quality tourism products it's a great time to explore Britain.'

One of my earliest memories is of playing on the Sands¹, but again, I'm not sure if I actually remember this, or, if it's from a photograph from the family album. All I know is that I wasn't fashionably dressed; the swimsuit I was wearing was hideous, and the sun hat was even worse!

5 There are photos, too, of sandcastles which my dad and I built, with channels running down to the sea so that the water could reach our carefully constructed moat. Tiny flags flapped on top of sand pies that we emptied out of our buckets. The sand, of course, had to be the right texture – not too dry, not too sloppy – so that when the bucket was upended, a perfect tower of sand appeared.

10 Leaving the beach to go home was sad, and there was always a decision to be made about whether to leave the sandcastle for others to play with, or whether to jump on it and stamp it flat. I don't think I was too good with the idea of sharing things at that age, so I liked to believe that I was a giant whose big feet could destroy buildings.

15 From an early age I always liked to ride the beach donkeys². They were led along in teams of four, their names written on straps above their eyes: Neddy, Noddy, Dolly and Joe. When I was small, my dad would walk beside me, his hand on my back to steady me as I rode along. Later on it was fun to pretend that the donkeys were horses and that I was a cowboy riding the desert trail. All day, beneath the summer sun, they would be guided along the beach, carrying young children or teenagers eating candyfloss, sometimes with 20 parents too, or the occasional stout gran or granddad bumping along and laughing for the camera.
